

Theo and the Pocket Planet

Page 1

Theo was a quiet boy with a loud imagination.

One day, he found a shiny marble in his coat pocket that wasn't there before.

Theo leaned closer. Inside the marble, he saw tiny trees, rivers, and even clouds. "It's a whole planet!" he whispered.

The marble pulsed with light—FLASH!

Theo shrank down and fell right into the tiny world with a bounce!

Theo landed in a tiny village with talking ladybugs and mushroom houses.
“Welcome to Pocket Planet!” they cheered.

A brave beetle named Bix offered Theo a ride.
They zipped through winding leaf tunnels and over bubble streams.

In a glowing meadow, Theo found a crystal flower.
Tiny creatures hovered nearby, giggling as it shimmered.

Bix led Theo through mushroom forests and rainbow ponds.
A turtle joined them for the journey.

The crystal flower blinked once, then twice.
“It’s time,” said Bix. “The portal is opening.”

Theo blinked—and found himself home.
His mom hugged him tight. "Where were you, dreamer?"

That night, Theo curled up in bed.
The marble sat glowing gently on his shelf.

Far away, the Pocket Planet carousel spun slowly among the stars.

And the little planet shimmered, waiting for its next visitor.
